NURSING TIMES

NURSE is always welcome when she comes into the ward with the evening drink of 'Ovaltine'. This delicious food beverage has long been a favourite in Hospitals, Sanatoria and Nursing Homes throughout the country.

Delicious 'Ovaltine' is soothing and comforting. It helps to promote the conditions favourable to natural, refreshing sleep. And, during sleep, it assists in building up and maintaining strength and vitality.

Medical and nursing authorities have long recognized the outstanding advantages of 'Ovaltine'. Nurses can confidently encourage patients to drink this ideal nightcap.

New horizons in nursing for you as an officer in

QUEEN ALEXANDRA'S ROYAL ARMY NURSING CORPS

Your qualification as an SRN is the passport to a nursing career in many different fields. One of the most important and exciting things it can lead to is a commission in Queen Alexandra's Royal Army Nursing Corps.

Q.A.R.A.N.C. serves the Army all over the world as well as at home. The Corps has an especially important job to do: its work is particularly interesting and varied. (If you are interested in tropical diseases for instance, you will find great scope in Q.A.R.A.N.C.). You earn an excellent salary, supplemented by generous uniform and overseas allowances, and officers are entitled to 42 days' paid leave a year.

LOOK TO A GOOD FUTURE. You will join Q.A.R.A.N.C. as a Lieutenant, almost certainly with much higher pay than you are earning now. You can sign on for 2 to 8 years' service or for a permanent regular commission. However long you decide to serve, you can be sure of regular pay increases and steady promotion. From the start you enjoy the privileges of an Army Commission. There are the widest opportunities for nursing work, as well as administration. At the end of your service in Q.A.R.A.N.C. you will be given a generous gratuity or a pension.

NURSING IS EXCITING AND REWARDING WORK IN Q.A.R.A.N.C. You have such splendid opportunities—and there is so much to interest you. If you would like to find out more about Q.A.R.A.N.C. write to the Matron-in-Chief, War Office, (AMD4/TN/59/10), London, S.W.1.

When treatment demands bland fluid–

makes it easy

Barley water has long been recognised as the ideal treatment in cases where large amounts of liquid form part of the prescription. With its high solids content, smooth demulcent barley water is especially suitable in gastro-intestinal complaints where the internal membranes are inflamed and tender.

Robinson's Lemon Barley and Orange Barley provide a convenient form of natural, wholesome barley water freshened with lemon and orange and perfectly balanced for rapid absorption.

Robinson's 'Patent' Barley gives a quickly prepared home-brew of barley water that can be mixed with milk or flavoured with any fruit juice that the patient prefers. A half-pound pack makes 96 glassfuls of fresh barley water.

Essential to your patients' recovery—an odour-free atmosphere

HOW MODERN HOSPITALS USE AIR-WICK

Today, modern hospitals recognize that clean, fresh-smelling wards are conducive to their patients' recovery. They know that the unpleasant smells that are connected with illness, even antiseptics and anaesthetics, can hinder patients getting well quickly.

By a scientific method of "pairing" odours and so neutralizing them, Air-wick creates a happy "clean" atmosphere for both patients and staff.

Air-wick is perfectly safe to use in all circumstances, and is economical, non-toxic, non-inflammable and contains no harmful ingredients. For large wards, a special piece of equipment, known as an Osmefan, is available. The regular Air-wick bottle keeps small wards constantly fresh and Air-wick Mist effectively kills sudden smells. That is why most up-to-date hospitals use the free advice of the Air-wick Hospital Service.

To obtain expert advice on your particular odour problems, write to: The Hospital Service Department, Airwick Ltd., Slough, Bucks.

Patients feel better in a "clean," fresh atmosphere. Write to Air-wick Hospital Service Dept., Airwick Ltd., Slough, Bucks, for information about Airwick installations for your hospital.

CITY OF OXFORD

HEALTH DEPARTMENT

APPOINTMENT OF STUDENT HEALTH VISITORS

Applications are invited from State Registered Nurses who have passed at least the first examination of the Central Midwives' Board and who are desirous of obtaining the Health Visitor's Certificate of the Royal Society of Health. The Council has reserved places in the Health Visitors' Training School which commences in September next, under the auspices of the Oxfordshire County Council, whose headquarters are in the City of Oxford.

During the seven months' training period, the candidates will be paid a salary equivalent to 85 per cent. of the minimum scale of salary applicable to Health Visitors; the full minimum salary for the next 12 months, and one incremental addition for the remaining five months. It will be a condition that candidates who are accepted for training will be required to take up Health Visitor's duties with the Council for at least 17 months after qualification.

The successful applicants will be required to pay the necessary fees and expenses for the course and examination, in the first instance, but a grant is made towards this (approximately £40) under the Council's post entry scheme for administrative and other officers.

Forms of application may be obtained from the Medical Officer of Health, Health Department, Greyfriars, Paradise Street, Oxford, to whom they should be returned, completed, not later than 4th March, 1961.

Frontiers of Nursing

WHAT IS the proper task of the nurse?

This question has often been asked and from time to time an attempt has been made to answer it, but more often than not this has taken the form of specifying tasks which are not proper to the nurse rather than detailing those which are. Indeed it is doubtful whether it is desirable or reasonable to try to produce a detailed answer to the question. To do so might well lead to a rigidity which would not be in the best interests of nursing service or of the profession itself.

Nursing is a profession possessing its own skills, making its own particular and invaluable contribution, but to view it in isolation is unrealistic. Nursing and medicine must go forward together; while basic nursing care and all that this implies may be regarded as a constant factor, technical nursing must reflect advances in medicine and surgery.

Nevertheless if nurses are to have time to give that personal care and attention, that support and understanding to the patient, that is their primary responsibility, the increasing demands made upon them must be examined and some means found of controlling them. Furthermore, where in order to maintain service to the patients nurses are required to undertake complex technical procedures outside the scope of routine nursing and involving heavy responsibility, it is essential, in justice to all concerned, that the nurses' position be adequately safeguarded.

Recognizing that this matter concerned doctors as well as nurses, the College initiated discussions with the British Medical Association which finally resulted in an agreed statement* which appears in full on page 223. This statement sets out in formal terms certain guiding principles and makes recommendations regarding the means by which questions of the type referred to above may be resolved.

Because conditions are not uniform throughout the country it is believed that these matters should be dealt with at local level, and that the employing authority should be brought into the picture. This throws a considerable responsibility on nurse administrators and ward sisters in hospital and on nurses engaged in the local authority and occupational health nursing services. It is for them to get together to assess the problem as it affects them and the service which they give so as to be prepared with constructive suggestions when they meet around a table with their medical colleagues.

The value of this type of machinery is not confined to determining the respective frontiers of professional responsibility; it can and should result in a greater understanding between doctors and nurses and thus play a vital part in ensuring the best possible service to the patient in hospital and to the community.

Highlights from WHO, Delhi

IN INDIA the average expectation of life at birth is rising: a mere 24 years in 1947, it has now reached 42 years (even that is only comparable to the figure in this country in Shakespeare's day), and it is still going up. As proof of the steady improvement in environmental health, there was not a single case of cholera when four million people converged on Allahabad for a religious festival. At the 14th World Health Assembly in Delhi at which these items were reported the need was stressed for applying to tropical diseases (cholera, smallpox, yaws, typhus, leprosy, etc.) the same energetic eradication programme which had shown such notable results with malaria.

S.E. London G.P. Centre

PART OF THE FORMER Pioneer Health Centre at Peckham has now been adapted and equipped as a diagnostic and treatment centre for family doctors in South East London. It has an operation room where the doctor will be able to perform minor surgery on his own patients. There are nursing staff to carry out treatment on the doctor's instructions, and arrangements have been made for close co-operation with health visitors and other social workers. A doctor will ask his patients to come to the centre when their condition requires better facilities for investigation or treatment than he has in his surgery, but not the full investigation or treatment available at a hospital. The South East London General Practitioners' Centre was to be opened yesterday by Lord Cohen of Birkenhead. The director is to be Brigadier H. L. Glyn Hughes.

'Your Life in their Hands'

THE BBC are telecasting a new series of Your Life in their Hands programmes. The first, on Wednesday, February 22, will be about gall-stones and their treatment, and will come from Charing Cross Hospital. Subsequent programmes will be about exchange transfusion, the surgical treatment of Parkinsonism, gastric haemorrhage, high blood pressure and the kidney, and open heart surgery, and will come respectively from Queen Charlotte's Maternity Hospital, St. George's Hospital, the Central Middlesex Hospital, St. Mary's Hospital, and Hammersmith Hospital. Readers will remember the controversy that raged around the first series of programmes in 1958. This time the emphasis will be on the contribution of research to treatment. Nurses should not miss the opportunity to view these programmes.

'The Last of the Drum'

'THE LAST OF THE DRUM', a film made by the Bowater-Scott Corporation about central sterile supply, was shown recently at a preview to an audience of matrons, tutors, theatre superintendents, doctors and administrators. It proved disappointing to all groups and it seemed to satisfy none. Photographed at Princess Margaret Hospital, Swindon, Musgrave Park and the Bristol Royal Infirmary, throughout its 20 minutes the camera moved bewilderingly from one hospital to another. For the nurse the filming always seemed to stop at the interesting part while one of the fastest commentaries ever heard moved breathlessly on. For whom was this film made? Nurses, doctors and administrators are interested in different aspects of CSS and their separate needs should be catered for. Perhaps Bowater-Scott, who have done so much to facilitate the work of these departments by research into suitable paper, could be persuaded to make more films with a specific audience in mind. The film is available on free loan from Bowater-Scott Corporation.

Hospital Building Note 4

HMSO 1s. 6d.

Two examples of the Duplex type of ward layout, with the beds divided into two groups. These wards have the advantage that both sexes can be nursed in the same unit.

WARD UNITS in new hospitals should normally consist of 27-32 beds, with appropriate ancillary accommodation, according to the Ministry of Health's Hospital Building Note 4, published at the beginning of this week. However, it is noted that a small 16-bed intensive-care unit associated with a larger 52-bed non-intensive care unit is now being suggested for the new Coventry Hospital.

The Note suggests that in all new hospitals the proportion of single rooms available for all purposes should be not less than 20% of total beds.

The schedule of basic accommodation includes a sister's room in addition to a nurses' station or duty room. It also lists clean and dirty utility rooms, and a dressing room.

Various ward layouts are discussed, including the double-circular or 'race-track' layout, with a central core of ancillary rooms serving wards on the perimeter. This is in operation in a number of hospitals abroad and it is argued that it reduces the work of nurses by cutting down travelling distances.

Fig. 4. The double-circular or 'race-track' layout with a central core of rooms serving wards on the perimeter. It may save space on a restricted site, but ventilation costs are likely to be high. The Ministry hopes to issue a supplementary Building Note on these points. ▶

Complications of Pregnancy and Labour

1. Pre-eclampsia

R. G. LAW, M.D., M.R.C.O.G., Consultant Obstetrician and Gynaecologist, Whittington Hospital, London

Eclampsia is now a rare condition, but pre-eclampsia is still common and, if untreated, may present grave dangers. This is the first of six articles on possible complications of pregnancy and labour.

PRE-ECLAMPSIA may be defined as a state peculiar to pregnancy characterized by hypertension, oedema and albuminuria, which, if untreated, may progress to eclampsia. The two conditions are thus closely linked, the one representing the earlier and the other the later stages of the same disease process. While eclampsia is still of the greatest gravity both to the mother and to the foetus, it is now a rare condition. Interest thus centres upon pre-eclampsia, because of its frequency and since, if it is untreated, it may present serious dangers.

Incidence and Dangers

Precise diagnostic criteria have never been established, since the incidence of pre-eclampsia is uncertain. However, it is probably true to say that about 10 to 15 per cent. of all pregnant women suffer from the condition to a greater or lesser extent.

The disease favours certain types and conditions, such as primiparae (especially the more elderly), hypertensives, multiple pregnancy, hydramnios and hydatidiform mole—where severe pre-eclampsia may be of unusually early onset.

The dangers of the condition are both maternal and foetal. The maternal hazards are related to the development of some complication—pre-eclampsia itself being harmless—and are as follows:

(1) eclampsia;
(2) accidental antepartum haemorrhage;
(3) cerebral haemorrhage;
(4) renal lesions such as bilateral cortical necrosis.

'Balloon vulva' prior to delivery in pre-eclamptic toxaemia.

[Illustrations on this page from Eden and Holland's Manual of Obstetrics, 11th edition. Edited by A. Brews. Churchill. By courtesy of the editor and publishers.]

The remote maternal risks have been much exaggerated in the past. Chronic nephritis is never seen, and essential hypertension, while it may seem to result from pre-eclampsia, almost certainly does not do so. It should, however, be added that pre-eclampsia tends to arise in women who either have or will later develop essential hypertension.

Oedema of the vulva in pre-eclamptic toxaemia. Complete subsidence of oedema five days after delivery.

The foetal hazards, like the maternal, are immediate rather than remote. Intrauterine death may occur from placental insufficiency; it is more common in early and severe cases, where there is a great liability to infarction, and at the onset of labour, when the ischaemic effect of the contracting uterus upon the placenta emphasizes any deficiency.

Prematurity may also have to be contended with. Whether it is spontaneous, or created by induction of labour, the infant may be spared the risk of intrauterine death only to perish from the hazards of birth in the premature state.

It is sometimes taught that infants born of pre-eclamptic mothers may themselves show signs of dangerous 'toxaemia'. This is not true. Oedema is common in the premature and is unrelated to excess fluid retention in the mother, while no 'toxin' has ever been demonstrated in the infant or in the mother. Indeed, it has been shown that, once born, the infant of the pre-eclamptic mother has, weight for weight, a better chance of survival than the child of a normal mother.

Diagnosis

Although the diagnosis of established pre-eclampsia is straightforward, that of the early condition is more difficult. The cardinal signs of hypertension, oedema and albuminuria are unmistakable but serious risks will be run should one await the development of all three. In a condition which owes its dangers to its complications, an early diagnosis must be made if Chronic hypertension in pregnancy treated with oral reserpine. (The patient was aged 31, married 11 years. Para. 1. Accidental haemorrhage and macerated stillbirth at 30 weeks of pregnancy. B.P. 180/125 settling to 150/110 at time of discharge after 10 days.) There was never any albuminuria nor oedema. It was suspected that the foetus was not growing after the 35th week of pregnancy.

from Eden and Holland's Manual of Obstetrics.] treatment is to be effective and this cannot be done by relying upon the classical signs. Excessive weight gain during pregnancy, particularly an increase of over 8 lb. between the 20th and 30th week, is associated with an increased incidence of pre-eclampsia. In view of this, recognition of abnormal weight gain is of value in establishing a diagnosis, the more so since this gain precedes other physical signs by several weeks.

The rise in blood pressure which may occur in the early stages is also liable to be misinterpreted. While it is necessary to recognize certain criteria of hypertension —such as the commonly accepted level of 140/90 mm. Hg.—attention should be paid to any increase over the level of blood pressure in early pregnancy since such slight rises are of the greatest importance in early diagnosis.

Symptoms such as headache, epigastric pain, vomiting, visual disturbances and oliguria are late manifestations of pre-eclampsia and may indicate that eclampsia is imminent. They play no part in early diagnosis.

Management

Although the mild form of pre-eclampsia is not preventable, its more severe manifestations may almost always be avoided. Antenatal supervision needed for the early detection of the condition may be summarized as follows.

(1) Regular visits to the clinic; monthly until the 28th week, fortnightly until the 36th week, weekly thereafter.
(2) Attention to weight gain, especially between the 20th and 30th week.
(3) Care in the interpretation of small rises in blood pressure.
(4) More frequent clinic attendances for those patients whose condition predisposes to pre-eclampsia. Such cases should be seen fortnightly until the 30th week and weekly thereafter.

Treatment of pre-eclampsia is best carried out in hospital. However, the requisite number of beds is rarely available. In consequence, early and mild pre-eclamptics should be treated in their homes, hospital admission being reserved for the more severe case, or where, for some reason, domiciliary management is impracticable. Wherever treatment is carried out, its principles remain the same.

(1) To prevent deterioration of the pre-eclampsia.
(2) To allow the foetus to become mature.

Since these aims are somewhat contradictory, it is at times necessary to choose between them. However this may be, the following methods of treatment are available:

(1) Rest and sedation—with regard for the patient's emotional background.
(2) Dietary restrictions.
(3) Hypotensive and diuretic drugs.
(4) Induction of labour and Caesarean section.

Domiciliary Treatment

Only patients with a blood pressure below 140/90 mm.Hg., minimal oedema and no albuminuria can be treated at home. It is necessary both to impress upon the mother that although she may feel perfectly well her condition must not be taken lightly and to make certain that all concerned recognize the significance of the symptoms of severe pre-eclampsia in order that medical aid may be summoned should these arise.

Management is essentially as follows.

(1) Rest. At least 12 hours every night in bed, with an additional 2-3 hours every afternoon.
(2) Sedation. Phenobarbitone, gr. ½-1 twice a day, Soneryl, gr. 3, at night. (Since it is never easy to foretell a patient's reaction to barbiturates it may be necessary to alter both the drugs and the doses.)
(3) Diet should be high protein—low carbohydrate, with no salt added. A diet sheet is of value. No patent medicines, especially no aperient salts. Constipation is best treated with a bulk laxative such as Celevac.

(4) Investigations are necessarily simple. The blood pressure should be recorded at least twice weekly and preferably daily. A clean specimen of urine should be tested twice weekly. An intake-output chart is of value but not essential.

The advantage of domiciliary treatment is that the patient, being with her family, is less likely to worry, while a hospital bed is freed for a more urgent case. However, the disadvantages of home management outweigh these points. Close supervision is impossible, dietary restrictions are rarely followed and bed rest is usually disregarded since the patient, feeling well, believes herself to be in no danger. As a result, the majority of cases ultimately worsen and require hospital admission.

Hospital Treatment

Treatment in hospital is necessary where the blood pressure is over 140/90 mm.Hg., where there is more than minimal oedema or any degree of albuminuria. Its advantages are that thorough supervision is possible, adequate rest, sedation and diet are assured and that special treatment may be given if required. The patient must appreciate the need for admission and must try to solve or shelve her domestic problems if proper benefit is to be obtained. This is usually more readily possible than might be imagined.

The investigations necessary are as follows.

(1) Twice daily blood pressure, pulse and temperature record.
(2) Daily testing of a clean urine specimen for albumin. Daily Esbach tests.
(3) Fluid intake-output chart.
(4) Oedema to be assessed daily.
(5) Weekly weight record.
(6) Haemoglobin estimation on admission.
(7) Catheter specimen of urine to laboratory for microscopy and culture.

Treatment may be summarized as follows:

1. Rest. Complete bed rest initially. Limited ambulation later if condition improves, for example, for toilet facilities. Immediate return to bed rest if condition worsens.

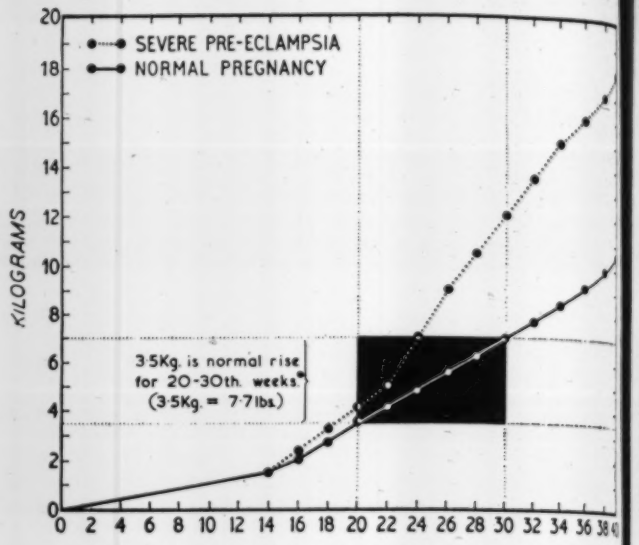
2. Sedation. If pre-eclampsia is severe, Sodium Amytal, gr. 3 four-hourly. If eclampsia imminent, morphine, paraldehyde or Avertin and magnesium sulphate may be needed. Dosage is reduced with improvement, and later phenobarbitone, gr. ½-1 twice a day is substituted. Soneryl, gr. 3 at night, may also be necessary.

3. Diet. Restrictions as described earlier. Chocolates and sweets must not be supplied by visitors.

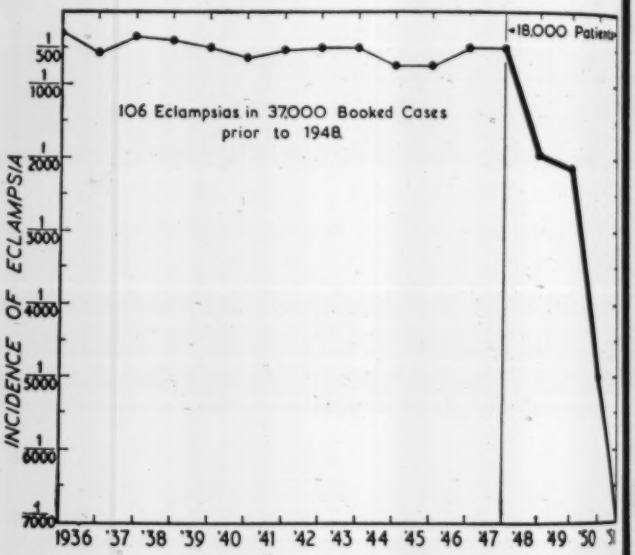
4. Special measures. Hypotensive drugs, such as Puroverine, are used in certain cases. These cause a marked drop in the blood pressure but are of less value in prolonging the life of the foetus. Individual dosage must be determined and frequent blood pressure readings are needed until stabilization is reached. Where oedema is marked, chlorothiazide (Saluric), ½ g. twice a day for four days in any one week, may be given.

5. Induction of labour. This step is called for in the following circumstances:

(a) where the patient's condition worsens despite treatment;
(b) where deterioration occurs after initial improvement;
(c) where no further improvement occurs after the 36th week;



Weight-gain in pregnancy, normal and with severe pre-eclampsia.



Showing effect of the anti-eclampsia campaign 1948-51, at the Women's Hospital, Sydney (R. H. J. Hamlin).

[Reproduced by permission of Prof. R. Kellar and the publishers from British Obstetric and Gynaecological Practice, second edition. Edited by Holland and Bourne, Heinemann.]

(d) where the foetus fails to grow—this denotes placental insufficiency and may lead to intra-uterine death;

A 'medical induction', followed by low rupture of the membranes, possibly preceded by a Syntocinon drip, is the treatment of choice. Caesarean section may be preferred to induction in the following circumstances:
(a) fulminating pre-eclampsia;
(b) failed surgical induction;
(c) elderly primiparae;

Post-partum Care

Once delivered, pre-eclamptics usually cause little anxiety. Occasionally the blood pressure may rise, sometimes alarmingly, in the first days of the puerperium. Treatment is identical with that advised for a severe case in pregnancy. Eclampsia will not occur after the first three days. In the average case the blood pressure returns gradually to normal, sometimes taking several weeks to do so. Albuminuria usually disappears within 8 to 10 days. Increased rest should be advised during the puerperium with 12 to 14 days in hospital if possible and a more leisurely return to normal life.

Outlook in Future Pregnancies

Pre-eclampsia is liable to recur in subsequent pregnancies, the chances of this being as high as 30 to 40 per cent. The majority of such cases represent patients with mild essential hypertension with a super-added pre-eclampsia. Whether pre-eclampsia is so liable to recur in those with a normal blood pressure is debatable. Wherever the truth may lie, a pregnant woman with a past history of pre-eclampsia must be regarded as an increased risk and must be given the most careful antenatal attention. Only in this way may any future pre-eclampsia be recognized and treated in time to render it innocuous both to the mother and to the foetus.

TALKING POINT

WELL, NOT FOR THE FIRST TIME, we've upset the health visitors. One of my colleagues, writing a chatty little article about how we produce this journal every week, wrote 'We shall not labour this point, because we know that nurses aren't really interested in money.' We paid the readers the compliment of not using an exclamation mark (which is a device that usually shows poverty of style and implies an insult to the reader) and left the little irony at that.

But almost to a man (and woman) you rose up with your complaints. We were irresponsible to publish such statements . . . etc. One irate nurse's husband threatened to attack us in person. And so on and so forth.

Now, really, this isn't good enough. You must learn to take a tiny, tiny little joke (all too often we're accused of being pompous and didactic) and it wasn't really worth more than just the briefest of smiles. But, apart from anything else, are you really in nursing or health visiting for the money? Oh, so you are? Well, in that case it's time you learned a few of the facts of life.

For better or for worse, nursing is primarily a woman's profession; and the profession is economically geared as such. Now this is a simple fact and it has nothing whatever to do with the battle of the sexes. In the teaching profession, where there is supposed to be equal pay, we get periodic outbursts about the wealthy women teachers who invade the continent en vacance each year, while their male counterparts are papering the house and doing a second job to make ends meet. It is also a fact that in our society it is usual for the male to marry and to be the breadwinner and have to feed lots of little mouths. Yes, I know that women can and do have dependent relatives. But these relatives rarely outgrow their clothes, need to be educated and so on.

I know that it is quite impossible, having on more than one occasion tried, to convince a young man at the age of 18 that by the time he is 30 he will almost certainly have a wife, hostages to fortune and a mortgage around his neck. He just won't believe it. So, full of good-will and intentions, compassion and what-have-you, into a women's profession he comes, and by the time he is 30 he finds that he can't make both ends meet.

These are just statements of fact, nasty realities which nurses on the whole are so good at dodging.

But, as a woman reader, you agree with every word I've said, don't you?—it's just those men. But you still think that you're underpaid. In that case, take a good look around you, study the advertisements in the national and local papers and see who'll be prepared to pay you more than you're earning at present. I've offered prizes in this column before for people who can send me advertisements of these vacancies for shorthand typists at £20 a week. Dear readers, they just don't exist. You're not doing so badly on your present salary—and, if you're really still discontented, then honestly I don't think you should ever have started nursing in the first place. But if you think you can sell your services in a better market, then just go ahead and try.

But it's not fair, you will say. Teenage pop singers can earn fabulous amounts of money. Well, and so they do, because there is a public demand for these golden children—but you know you couldn't be a teenage pop singer, now don't you? And as for its not being fair, well, may I repeat once more—if you expect life to be fair then you're in for a sad disillusionment, all along the line. So let's try to grow up and learn to laugh at ourselves, just a teeny little bit. After all, there's a lot more to life than money (or is this just another tiny joke?).

Nurses Under Stress—3

ISABEL E. P. MENZIES

I WILL NOW CONSIDER why the social defences of which I have given some typical examples in the first two parts of this article were inadequate, as shown by the persisting unduly high level of stress.

It has long been known that the individual whose psychic defences are based on evasion remains a prey to emotional disturbances and is vulnerable to stress. He cannot experience painful feelings fully enough and cannot, therefore, discharge them. On the other hand, the person who can face painful feelings and difficult situations more fully, grows in psychic strength. He can understand better the nature of the stress and of the situations which evoke it. He can reduce the degree of stress by developing greater capacity to deal with stressful situations. But if he is a member of an organization which relies heavily on evasive social defences he is in much the same plight as an individual who uses evasive psychic defences because he cannot develop his own defences.

Evasion Inhibits Growth

This is the situation of the nurse. While on duty she has little choice but to accept protection against stress by evasion, since her attitudes and behaviour while on duty must conform closely to those required by the service, implicitly or explicitly, formally or informally; that is, she must accept the social defences and use them as her own. The evasive social defence system actually inhibits the development of the nurse's capacity to deal with her stress and to experience it less acutely.

'It seems that in nursing circles a "responsible" student nurse is one who loyally and faithfully carries out her prescribed task. This is a departure from ordinary usage where responsibility is closely linked with using discretion.'

An example may make the point clear. A student nurse is 'protected' against the stress arising from making decisions by having the decisions she is allowed to make reduced to a minimum. This deprives her of many opportunities to learn how to make decisions effectively, to test them and to experience their consequences. This slows the development of her skill in making decisions and her ability to reduce stress through the reassurance of decisions well-made and growing confidence in the skill to make them. Instead, since decisions cannot always be eliminated, nurses come to face them without sufficient assurance from experience that they can make effective decisions, and therefore stress continues. One had the impression that few nurses were really secure about their ability to make wise decisions. In other words, one may say that the social defence system protects nurses, to some extent, from experiences of stress at the moment, but at the expense of its more permanent reduction.

[Adapted from the 'International Nursing Review,' December 1960, by courtesy of the editor.]

In Miss Menzies' final article she makes some suggestions for the alleviation of the stress and anxiety she has described in her two previous articles.

The 'Responsible' Nurse

In some ways the social defence system protects students and qualified nurses against stress and difficulties which many of them are quite capable of handling successfully. There seems little doubt that many student nurses could take and enjoy more responsibility than the service now allows.

To give point to this it may be necessary to clarify what is meant by responsibility. It seems that in nursing circles a 'responsible' student nurse is one who loyally and faithfully carries out her prescribed tasks. This is a departure from ordinary usage where responsibility is closely linked with using discretion. That is, a 'responsible' person is one who is capable of using discretion wisely in doing his job, 'discretion' being just what the student nurse may not use. Many student nurses are capable, given appropriate help, of making, maintaining and enjoying continuous relationships with patients. They want to do this and are taught that it is desirable, but the system of work organization prevents them from doing it.

People enjoy facing difficulties and enjoy and need the challenge they present, provided the difficulties are not beyond their capacities. Success can be a great reassurance. Over-protection makes it impossible for many nurses to deploy fully in their jobs their personal capacities and professional skills, and experience real success. Indeed, the more mature and capable the nurse, the greater the problem. This situation is extremely frustrating to nurses who feel inhibited from doing their best for their patients and colleagues. Student nurses tend to feel this most keenly but the feeling is shared to some extent at all levels in the hierarchy. Nurses feel guilty and anxious about it. Thus, the over-protection built into the social defence system itself evokes stress.

Efficiency and Responsibility

There are other ways in which the service itself gives rise to stress. For example, it is not very efficient as a method of organizing work. In this the nursing service is not at all unusual. Similar phenomena are to be observed in other kinds of social organization. They stem from the fact that in establishing a way of operating, a social organization cannot be concerned only with efficiency but must take into account the psychological needs of its members. Because of the high element of real danger in the nursing situation, care for the psychological needs of nurses tends to play a relatively large part vis-à-vis technical efficiency in determining the structure and method of functioning of the service. Some efficiency has had to be sacrificed, though not by conscious decision, to evasion of anxiety. Inefficiency in this sense is determined by the organization and is not a matter of an individual behaving inefficiently. Indeed, people who are behaving in one sense 'efficiently', that is, carrying out instructions carefully and well, feel 'inefficient' because they feel they are violating the general principles of good nursing or of common sense.

I can give only a few examples of such service-determined inefficiency which increases stress. The fact that student nurses and staff cannot deploy their personal capacities fully as described above is one example. It is very wasteful of human resources. Further, nurses, at least student nurses, are on occasion not fully occupied. This arises from the rather rigid system of work organization which makes it difficult to adjust to changing demand in a ward by reorganizing their work. Ward establishments tend to be aimed at peak rather than average work-loads and wards seem somewhat over-staffed. Nurses feel guilty about being under-employed, whether in respect of time or capacity and this increases stress. The system is also cumbersome and inflexible in a situation which increasingly demands flexibility, for example decision-making tends to be slow. This makes nurses anxious lest decisions are not made in time and irritable about delays in important matters.

'. . . student nurses are on occasion not fully occupied. . . . Ward establishments tend to be aimed at peak rather than average work-loads and wards seem somewhat overstaffed.'

Satisfaction Balancing Stress

This account would be incomplete without referring to the satisfaction which nurses experience in their work; such satisfactions are a very important counter-balance to stress. The potential rewards of nursing are great, in terms of such things as the recovery of patients, suffering relieved, and satisfying relationships with patients and colleagues. The nurses in this hospital clearly experienced their work as rewarding.

However, they did not seem to be experiencing the full potential reward because of certain features of the social system. For example, while the nursing service had considerable success in nursing patients, it was difficult for any one nurse to experience this in a personal way. The task-list system makes the contribution of one nurse to the nursing of one patient rather small. The reward is dissipated as well as the stress. Patients are grateful to 'the hospital' or 'the nurses', that is, rather impersonally, and the individual nurse misses the personal gratitude which is part of her reward. For student nurses an important satisfaction is the development of their knowledge and skill in nursing patients. The training and work situations quite definitely slow down this development. The better the student the less satisfaction she finds in the rate of development of her nursing skills. Indeed, our feeling was that the better students suffered a good deal in this respect and a significant number of them could not tolerate it and gave up training.

'Patients are grateful to "the hospital" or "the nurses", that is, rather impersonally, and the individual nurse misses the personal gratitude which is part of her reward.'

Nor is it possible under present conditions to realize at all fully the potential satisfactions in working with colleagues. Student nurses feel this particularly. For example, the traditional relationship between juniors and seniors described above means that the student nurse feels herself singled out more for blame than praise. This she finds very distressing, as she has a particular need for encouragement in settling down to her difficult profession. The student nurse tends to feel she does not matter as a person. They complain 'nobody cares what happens to you', 'nobody helps you', 'you have no individuality'. They say the senior staff neither understand nor help them when they are in trouble, indeed, when they are worried and guilty about a mistake they are reprimanded instead of being comforted.

It was not, however, our experience that the senior staff did not understand or care. They understood only too well, many of them having vivid and still agonizing memories of their own training. They expressed their understanding and sympathy to us, but felt unable to do so within operational relationships. They were often uncertain about the wisdom of entering into a close emotional relationship with their students, and uncertain of their skill in handling it. Their training had not prepared them for this.

They tended to fall back on the only behaviour they knew, the discipline and severity they experienced in their own training. In any case, it is not easy for student nurses to approach their seniors for that sort of help since by tradition they expect seniors to be disciplinarians. However, as a result of this situation, many senior staff feel they are not helping their colleagues and juniors enough and, in turn, miss the satisfaction which comes from really helping colleagues in need.

Conclusion

We have little doubt that some action about the situation described is desirable, especially since we have no reason to believe that this hospital differs in any significant way from other hospitals. It is clear that there is no simple solution; if there were, it would have been introduced long ago. The ultimate solution must be a re-structuring of the system of work organization and nurse training, so that it incorporates a different kind of social defence system based less on evasion. For example, one might try systems of ward organization which give nurses more continuous and intensive contact with patients; this would require new techniques for dealing with the stress that would arise initially, especially among the junior student nurses. Together these would mean an earlier confrontation of stressful situations and, if successfully handled, would lead to an ultimate alleviation of stress.

In our opinion, blueprints for change are not possible although one has a general idea of direction. The most hopeful approach to the problem of change at this stage would seem to be to tackle it in a concrete rather than an abstract way: for example, to work in one hospital or even a part of a hospital and try to build a working model. This approach, through model-building and progressive modification of models followed by dissemination of successful models, has proved successful in building and rebuilding other kinds of social organizations. It is our hope that we have been able to contribute to the understanding of the nursing situation and so to the design of such new models.

We began our study four years ago and our description of the hospital refers to that period. Since then a number of important developments have taken place partly as a result of the study. These can be regarded as attempts at partial new models. For example, a new system for allocation of student nurses is now in operation which gives longer continuous duty tours, new training has been introduced for the post-certificate student to give more experience of administration and more real responsibility, an attempt is being made to develop a closer and more supportive relationship between the teaching staff and the students. We are very grateful to the hospital which gave us the opportunity to carry out the study and permission to publish this paper*. Particularly we are grateful to the nurses for their serious and courageous co-operation with us in what proved to be a long and arduous investigation, and for their sincere efforts to use the research findings.

Cot Locker for the Newborn

'Any method that can reduce the number of times a baby is handled by a nurse, even for the changing of napkins, will help to lessen the risk of cross-infection in a maternity hospital.'

—Dr. Bernard Laurance, consultant paediatrician, in The Lancet, January 14.

This locker, which has been used successfully in the Derby maternity hospitals for the past two years, accommodates all that a mother requires for changing her baby in the cot at her bedside. Its use not only helps the mother in learning to care for her own baby but reduces the risk of infection to the baby. The lockers are made by Allen White and Sons, Derby; the price is about £6.

THE UK ACCREDITED DELEGATES TO MELBOURNE

Miss M. B. Lawson, president NCN and candidate for presidency of ICN.

THE URGENT NEED for distributing information widely and quickly was the recurring theme of an Extraordinary Grand Council meeting of the National Council of Nurses of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, held on February 8 at the Royal Society of Medicine.

The purpose of this meeting was to enable all 103 members who will be attending the Congress of the International Council of Nurses at Melbourne in April to consider items on the agenda of the ICN Grand Council and Board of Directors; and to enable the five accredited delegates to go to the congress with a mandate from members after proper, informed discussion.

But such discussion was hampered considerably by the fact that the items under consideration gave little or no indication in their wording of what exactly was in the minds of the member countries submitting them, nor how these resolutions had arisen. Miss M. G. Lawson, president, said it would have been very helpful if a short explanation had accompanied each item or resolution. As it was, delegates would have to vote with insufficient knowledge in some instances.

At the beginning of the meeting Miss Lawson warmly welcomed Miss D. C. Bridges, general secretary of the ICN, Miss Helen Nussbaum, general secretary designate, and Miss Alice Sher, assistant general secretary. She said that the council would be grateful for any advice and guidance. It was essential to attend the congress clear and unanimous with regard to policy. The following items were considered.

(a) From the New Zealand Registered Nurses' Association. To discuss reciprocal registration facilities between countries in which the national nurses' associations are in membership with the ICN.

Miss M. Henry, registrar, General Nursing Council for England and Wales, in a succinct statement of her reasons for disagreeing with reciprocity, said that the fundamental points were that each country must be free to decide its own conditions of training to meet its own needs; and when considering applications for registration from another country, it had a duty both to the applicant and to its own nurses. Reciprocity meant that either all nurses or no nurses were to be accepted for registration from any one country. It was as well to remember that while the highest standard of nursing in that country might be acceptable, the lowest standard might not. It was surely better for us to continue as at present, giving individual consideration to each application for registration.

However, the situation could be improved in various ways, not the least of which would be the production by the ICN of a universal application form for all countries, so simplifying the procedure. At present the procedure for registration in each country was different. This application form, together with a basic record of training for all nurses, would greatly facilitate registration. Nurses found that details of their training were not always readily available. Discussion followed on this question of the standardization of records. It was agreed to oppose the establishment of reciprocity.

(b) From the American Nurses' Association—(i) To discuss the future location of ICN headquarters.

It was agreed to leave this matter to the discretion of the accredited delegates as it was essential that more information be available before any decision could be reached. Miss Bridges had explained that the present headquarters were no longer large enough and therefore this might be the moment to consider a change. Miss F. N. Udell, Royal College of Nursing, wondered if Geneva should be considered as an alternative. Miss Nussbaum, while agreeing that running costs might be cheaper in Switzerland, pointed out that in Geneva the ICN would be only one of many large international organizations. Miss M. J. Marriott, hon. treasurer, ICN, emphasized that finance was by far the most important consideration.

—(ii) To give further consideration to the proposal for an international conference of nursing journal editors.

Miss Peggy Nuttall, editor, Nursing Times, gave her views on the proposed rules and regulations for this conference. She said that these views were purely personal; she would not be present in Melbourne, and she realized, therefore, that her views would go forward as an expression of United Kingdom opinion. While it was a nice idea for the editors of all nursing journals to meet when practicable, she felt that it was unnecessary for such a meeting to be circumscribed by an elaborate set of rules and regulations, which would inevitably involve constitutional difficulties. It was all too easy to lose sight of the aim of an organization: 'We create a Leviathan, whose machinery becomes more important than the object for which it was created.' She found it disappointing, for example, that five of the nine resolutions for discussion at Melbourne were concerned with the constitution of the ICN—and this at a time when both in this country and elsewhere we were facing a grave nursing crisis. Miss Nuttall opposed any further constitutional organization such as that suggested.

As an editor of a weekly nursing journal there were two things, however, that she needed: regular and frequent press handouts from the ICN that contained up-to-the-minute news; and similar handouts from the NCN. In this way readers could be kept informed of the activities of the national and international nursing bodies. Miss Elise Gordon, editor, Nursing Mirror, Miss Nuttall said, was in full agreement with these views.

In reply, Miss Lawson said that the council would take to heart all that had been said on this question of publicity and public relations. In the past, it had not always let people know enough of what was going on. She said that a letter had been received from the president of the American Nurses' Association saying that the matter was of such significance that the advisability of setting up this body needed thorough exploration.

It was agreed not to support the proposal.

—(iii) To consider the method by which the consent of candidates is obtained in connection with nomination for ICN officers and members of Standing Committees.

It was agreed that the member country should get the consent of its nominee before submitting the name to the ICN.

(c) From the Danish Council of Nurses. To consider the establishment of an Employment Practices Division under the ICN.

(d) From the Swedish Nurses' Association. To consider the establishment of a third division at ICN headquarters to be called the Employment Practices Division.

Once more discussion was hindered owing to doubt as to what precisely was meant: in this case by 'employment practices'. Miss Udell said that if it meant economic welfare, then it should be supported. But if it meant legal responsibility for nursing practice, these resolutions should not be supported. A division for economic welfare with a consultant would provide a real service. Miss C. M. Hall, RCN, asked if the budget would allow for the necessary extensive field work without which such a division would not be useful. Miss Marriott said that it would if the proposed increase in dues took place. At this stage of the discussion, Miss T. Turner, Nightingale Fellowship, put in a strong plea that additional information be available in future. The accredited delegates were better informed having seen the minutes of ICN Grand Council meetings; but members were not so informed, and could not discuss such items intelligently. Miss Nuttall said that as far as this country was concerned, the nursing journals could help to keep members informed by publishing items on the agenda together with any available explanatory notes. Miss Bridges, in answer to Miss Lawson, thought that this idea could be brought forward at the congress.

The three resolutions submitted by the NCN* were then discussed. The first, on the continuity of membership with the ICN of the proposed newly constituted national professional nursing organization of this country, required no further comment. Miss Lawson said that the working party considering the unification had its hands full. It was hoped to 'have something down on paper' by September.

Before a lengthy discussion on the resolution recommending a spread of the increase in dues to the ICN over four years, instead of doubling them in 1962 (as resolved by the ICN Board of Directors at Helsinki in 1959), Miss Marriott, as hon. treasurer, added further explanation to her letter sent to members with the agenda. If the work of the ICN were to continue, then without doubt income must be increased. The ICN would otherwise die. At the end of the current financial year there would be a deficit. She hoped members would give the accredited delegates the opportunity to withdraw this resolution.

Mr. Holder, Catholic Nurses' Guild of Great Britain, said that while most members must feel sympathy towards Miss Marriott in her position as treasurer and that he agreed that the ICN needed to expand, nevertheless the council must be realistic. Where was the money to come from? Already some leagues had had to withdraw from membership. Miss M. B. Powell, Association of Hospital Matrons, thought that many members had had second thoughts about the resolution, particularly in view of the further information from the treasurer. If the money was needed, the resolution should surely be withdrawn? The UK might be in debt to the ICN for a year; but meanwhile every effort should be made to raise the money and to speed the formation of a unified body. Miss L. Young, West-

Cleaning and Disinfecting Bedpans and Urinals

V. M. CARROLL, B.A., Research Assistant, Nuffield Provincial Hospitals Trust

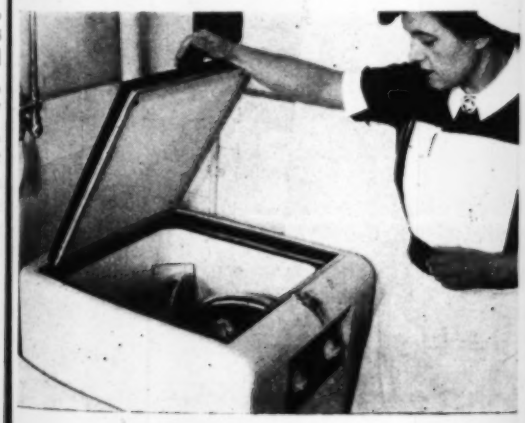
This account of ward trials carried out at Addenbrooke's Hospital, Cambridge, on two bedpan washers and disinfectors, the Dishlex and the Dent and Hellyer B55, is part of a paper given at the second meeting of the Central Sterilizing Club, at Cambridge, on December 19, 1960.

THE WORK of the Nuffield Provincial Hospitals Trust at Addenbrooke's Hospital, Cambridge, has been concerned primarily with the experimental central supply department. But the cleaning and disinfecting of bedpans and urinals has also been investigated. It is understood that in some American hospitals the washing and disinfecting of bedpans is undertaken by the central supply department, as a terminal process at the end of each patient's stay. However, it was not thought practicable here for every patient to have his own bedpan, which would not be sterilized until he went home. Therefore, the bedpans not being assigned to a particular patient, they must be disinfected each time they are used. A women's ward may use about 75 bedpans a day, and it cannot be seriously considered that these should be transported daily through the hospital to the central supply department.

The Problem

In the past, attention seems to have been directed towards finding a machine that will sterilize, or at least disinfect, bedpans. The cleanliness of the bedpans has received comparatively little attention. The real problem is to find a reliable machine, for use in the ward sluice rooms by the nurses and orderlies, that will produce a clean and disinfected bedpan every time. The ideal machine is one that will empty, clean, and disinfect bedpans and urinals in one operation. This may be done either individually or in batches, provided that the process is rapid enough not to cause a 'traffic jam' of dirty bedpans and urinals. The process should be such as to protect the nurse and her clothing from contamination, and the floor of the sluice room from drips and splashes. In all wards it is sometimes necessary to save specimens of faeces. The ideal bedpan washer should be able to clean a bedpan that has stood for an hour or so in a sluice room. The final process in the machine should leave the bedpan warm and dry.

A Dishlex bedpan washer and disinfector installed at Queen Alexandra Hospital, Cosham.



Experiments with Two Machines

Two machines were installed experimentally, to see whether they met such criteria. These were:

The Dishlex Rinser and Disinfector processes four bedpans in 10 minutes. It is, however, not a single process machine as the contents of the bedpans must first be emptied down a soil pipe.

The Dent and Hellyer B55 processes one bedpan in 90 seconds, which in practice works out at about five or six bedpans in 10 minutes. Although it is a single process machine, it had the fault that at the end of the cycle the bedpan was cold and wet and had to be dried on a towel. This was considered unhygienic. The cycle of the machine was altered so that the steam came last, and the bedpans now dry from their own latent heat. This was found to be satisfactory at most times, but during a busy bedpan round in a women's ward the bedpan has sometimes to be put under the tap to cool it.

The Dishlex machine therefore falls short of the ideal in so far as it is not a single process machine, while the B55 is not entirely satisfactory, at the moment, because of the need to cool the bedpans during a busy bedpan round. It should be possible to organize any bedpan round to fit in with the rate of processing of either machine.

Cleanliness

The Dishlex and the B55 were each tried for four weeks. The ward bedpans were made clean at the start of each trial. They were then inspected on most days and any having particles of visible contamination on them, other than hard water deposits, were counted as dirty. The others were counted clean. In every way the daily inspection was rigorous, a mirror being used to inspect under the rims. The bedpans used were stainless steel Perfection pattern made to BSI standards.

During the trials the nurses were encouraged to co-operate in the experiments. However, it may be that some bedpans were rinsed out manually and not put through the machine. It was assumed that this uncontrolled variable would operate as much against one machine as against the other. When the Dishlex was under trial the nurses were requested to empty the bedpans down an old machine, which was operated manually by handles for hot and cold water. The sluicing was intended to remove all solid matter, which should not be put into the Dishlex. Then, four at a time, the bedpans were put in the Dishlex for washing and disinfecting. Later the B55 machines were installed. The nurses were asked to use these machines solely and not undertake any manual washing.

The Dent and Hellyer 'Protector' B55 bedpan washer and disinfector.

The number of bedpans inspected from each machine was a total of 185 for the Dishlex and 324 for the B55. Faecal material was not washed off satisfactorily by either machine. It was found that, using the Dishlex, 71 per cent. of the bedpans in the male ward and 75 per cent. of those in the female had visible contamination on them. Using the B55 the figures were 51 per cent. and 58 per cent. It was noticed that there was an accumulation of dirt on certain bedpans. Contamination that was not washed off by the machine under trial remained from day to day. This uncontrolled variable is assumed to have operated equally against both machines.

Occasional observations were made on both machines using very thin smears of natural faecal contamination that had been left for about 20 minutes. Adequate emptying and rinsing before Dishlex washing had no effect on these very thin smears, which were not washed off completely by either machine. The reports of the nurses who use the machines confirm these results, and refute any argument that the tests on the Dishlex have been invalidated by insufficient sluicing of the bedpan first. Other tests on the washing powers of the machines were made with lipstick and with mustard dried on the bedpan from half an hour to four or five hours and overnight. Over several trials it was found that lipstick was not washed off by either machine. Mustard was washed off according to how long it had been allowed to dry and where it was placed. It was washed off more often in the centre of the bedpan than under the rim. Tests with artificial contamination were also made on the Summerling bedpan washer that had previously been installed in Addenbrooke's Hospital. It was no more able to wash off mustard and lipstick than the other two machines.

In the male ward the urinals are washed once a day in the Dishlex. They are spotless and are never scrubbed out as they used to be. The B55 is not adapted to take urinals.

Disinfection

The Dishlex and the B55 both aim at disinfecting as well as at cleaning the bedpans. In preliminary bacteriological tests it was found that the bacteria in natural faecal contamination died out very rapidly, and could not be relied upon to give a positive control growth before the bedpans were processed. Bedpans were therefore contaminated with a suspension of bacteria in albumen and processed in the B55; contaminated bedpans and urinals were processed in the Dishlex. For each test the full-time cycle of the machine was used. From not one article was a positive growth obtained.

It was found that this disinfection was independent of the washing. The bedpans were disinfected facing forwards towards the water jets or backwards so that the water impinged on the underside and not directly on the contamination. Urinals were disinfected in the Dishlex whether the neck was open for water to enter or closed with aluminium foil. This indicates that the disinfection is entirely due to heat and is independent of the washing process. Further tests suggest that shorter times in the Dishlex might be sufficient to disinfect bedpans. The Dishlex has been found useful for disinfecting wash bowls, non-disposable tooth mugs, etc.

Conclusions

Neither the Dishlex Bedpan Rinser and Disinfector nor the Dent and Hellyer B55 will produce a clean bedpan every time. A small sample of bacteriological results from both machines confirm that the heat and time cycles are sufficient to destroy bacteria. It is suggested that use should be made of the machines, but the responsibility of achieving cleanliness of bedpans rests with the nursing staff, who must be prepared to inspect the results of the machines and undertake some manual washing if necessary. Our aim still remains to find a machine to fulfil all requirements.

[I wish to thank Dr. Gleeson White of the John Bonnett Clinical Laboratories, Cambridge, for the bacteriological results, and the staff of Addenbrooke's Hospital.]

Drug Identification Chart

ABOUNT 150 NEW PRODUCTS have been included in the latest edition of The Chemist and Druggist Tablet and Capsule Identification Guide, which now provides an invaluable signpost to the identification of more than 900 tablets and capsules.

First published in 1956, the guide has been twice brought up to date with supplementary charts, and is now issued as a set of seven charts, five in colour and two in black and white. It may be obtained mounted on cards with a washable surface, suitable for hanging, for 17s. 6d. or as a brochure on white art paper containing the same illustrations and information as the cards, for 8s. 6d. In the coloured charts every tablet is shown actual size and it is a relatively simple matter to

Survey of Medical Radiation

DOCTORS AND PHYSICISTS, after carrying out during 1957 and 1958 a nation-wide measurement of the amount of radiation from medical and dental radiology, do not believe that any major restrictions are necessary on the medical use of X-rays or radiotherapy. This is the gist of the report* of the Adrian Committee on Radiological Hazards to Patients, published in December. The Committee was set up in 1956 after the MRC had concluded that medical radiology provided the largest man-made contribution to the irradiation, of the population. It now appears that the figures are lower than at first thought, although it is suggested that they could be still further reduced by improved techniques. The contribution of mass miniature radiography to radiation hazards is said to be negligible.

New Filter for Autoclaves

A NEW AND IMPROVED filter for all makes of autoclaves has been developed by E. N. Mackley and Co. of Gateshead, Co. Durham. It is made from glass fibre which is rot- and insect-proof and is claimed to be an absolute filter for bacteria and viruses. Cotton wool, which is still commonly used, has been criticized as a filter for autoclaves by a working party of the Medical Research Council.

A Fluoride Toothpaste

A TOOTHPASTE which contains fluoride and which has been endorsed by the American Dental Association as an effective anti-caries agent, is shortly to be marketed in this country.

A leading article in The Medical Officer of January 27 commented that it should not be difficult to counter any arguments that the introduction of this, or any other fluoridated toothpastes, would be alternative to the fluoridation of water supplies.

The British Dental Association has reserved judgement until the results of trials in this country are known, but American research indicates that the effectiveness of the preparation in preventing dental caries is directly associated with the frequency and thoroughness of its use. The Medical Officer estimated that in order to achieve the same results as the fluoridation of water supplies it would be necessary for all children to use the dentifrice three times daily under adult supervision.

ST. LUKE'S HOSPITAL, CHELSEA (matron: Miss E. M. J. Martin) is in Sydney Street, but this is not the Sidney Street of the famous seige. That is in the East End, not far from The London Hospital.

St. Luke's has its own history of drama and disaster. It was built as a general hospital, but in the blitz of 1941 a German bomb destroyed the operating theatres, X-ray department, doctors and sisters homes, kitchens and outpatient department. The patients were evacuated and it was not until the war was over that St. Luke's was reopened as a hospital for the elderly and chronic sick.

Now the hospital is recognized as a training school for assistant nurses. There is a fully qualified tutor in charge. Recently the wards have been upgraded and redecorated in a most attractive manner—even if the 'rainbow ward' with its brilliant colour contrasts on the ceiling is a little startling at first glimpse. Bed curtains are being installed and each ward has either a day room or day space for patients who can get up.

In the summer patients can go out in the grounds in their wheelchairs. The nursing care bestowed on these patients is of the highest order. Many have been at St. Luke's for a number of years, and there are two centenarians among them.

Pierre Robin Syndrome

J. WOOD, Ward Sister, Royal Hospital for Sick Children, Glasgow

The Pierre Robin syndrome is a congenital condition in which defective development of the floor of the mouth is associated with backward displacement of the tongue. Severe degrees are associated with a wide cleft of the hard and soft palate. Skilful and patient nursing is essential if the baby is to survive.

HYPOPLASIA of the mandible is not uncommon in young babies but occasionally this is associated with glossoptosis and the posteriorly placed tongue falls back and leads to recurrent respiratory infection and interference with swallowing. Lesser degrees of the syndrome are not uncommon and can usually be handled at home by positioning and careful feeding. In our experience severe degrees of the Pierre Robin syndrome are associated with a wide cleft of the hard and soft palate. Such babies have severe respiratory infection following aspiration of regurgitated feeds and frequent cyanotic attacks necessitate admission to hospital. They suffer from malnutrition or even starvation (Fig. 1). They are frail and unable to cope with infection. It is desirable to nurse them in the warmth and isolation of a cubicle.

In the early days of life such babies have as many as 12 cyanotic attacks each day. Oxygen and apparatus for resuscitation must always be at hand. Because of the danger of asphyxia the baby is nursed in a prone position. The benefit conferred by suturing the raw undersurface of the tongue to the floor of the mouth and the alveolus is doubtful and we have abandoned all such procedures. Nursing of babies with this anomaly is similar in many ways to the nursing of premature babies. Infinite care and patience are required during the first month or two of life.

Fig. 1. Pierre Robin syndrome. Baby H.M. at the age of three weeks.

Fig. 2. At the age of three months.

Fig. 3. At the age of 12 months after palate repair.

Feeding Difficulties

Feeding these babies presents many difficulties. They are unable to suck and swallow and their coughing reflexes are poor. The danger of inhalation of food is therefore great and it is safer to underfeed than overfeed. The least exhausting method of feeding is by slow nasogastric milk drip but this method is not always acceptable, especially if the infant requires frequent resuscitation. Oesophageal feeding is an alternative method. A fine polythene oesophageal tube is passed through the mouth for approximately five inches and feeds are given slowly so that there is no over-spill into the trachea. The tube is passed each time the baby is fed.

When the baby shows some weight gain and the choking attacks become less frequent, other methods of feeding may be introduced. It is desirable that the baby learns the art of sucking as soon as his condition permits. All changes in feeding must be done gradually. Although a tube-fed baby makes sucking movements with his lips this does not mean that he is able to suck a bottle. Pipette feeding may be tried when the baby's condition permits. Only 10 drops of feed can be given at a time and this is a slow process. Belcroy feeding is preferable to pipette feeding as it gives the baby an opportunity to learn to suck. The small teat on a Belcroy feeder is no use to these babies and we use the bulbous end for the teat. At first only a small part of the feed is given by either of these methods, the remainder being gavaged.

When feeding is reasonably satisfactory, a dental appliance may be fitted to occlude partially the palatal gap and diminish regurgitation; spoon feeding is begun. The appliance appears to comfort the baby and it certainly encourages him to suck. The outlook is now very different. The baby starts to thrive, the appearance of the mandible improves and the danger of asphyxia is negligible. It may now be possible to feed the baby by bottle and we can be reasonably confident of his survival (Fig. 2).

County Borough of Ipswich

Falling Infant Mortality Record

Ipswich is an industrial town with a population of over 100,000. Yet ever since 1905 its infant mortality rate has been consistently below the national average—in 1959 it was 15.3 per thousand live births compared with the rate for the whole of England and Wales of 22 per thousand.

Commenting in his annual report on the town's domiciliary midwifery service, Dr. Leader, Ipswich MOH, says that the majority of women nowadays book their doctors and midwives early in pregnancy. The routine testing of blood, urine, etc., is firmly established. During 1959, 254 mothers attended mothercraft classes which serve a double purpose as they are attended by pupil midwives and student nurses as part of their training.

During the year the midwifery flying squad was called out on five occasions, four for postpartum haemorrhage and one for obstetric shock.

Prevention is Cheaper than Cure

Dr. P. V. Pritchard, medical officer of health, Gosport, refers in his latest annual report to the effect that preventive medicine has had upon the incidence of diphtheria. Working through the health departments, preventive medicine had saved thousands of lives and millions of pounds.

Dr. Pritchard believes that the Government and the public have forgotten the value of this preventive work. They are pouring out money for treatment when a little spent on preventing unnecessary illness would pay handsome dividends. The public health departments are being neglected. We have in many ways proved our economic value in the past. We could do it again.'

London Airport—Danger to Public Health?

Following representations from Middlesex County Council the County Councils' Association has decided to support representations made to the Minister of Aviation on behalf of those citizens of Middlesex who are unfortunate enough to live in the vicinity of London Airport.

The Association resolved that 'While excessive noise at any particular airport is the obvious concern of local authorities in the area affected, it is evident that the greater use of jet aircraft and helicopters, at military as well as at civil aerodromes, is likely to raise problems of nuisance and injury to health on an increasing scale.'

They therefore considered that, in addition to local action, there should be discussion at national level on the subjects of noise levels, night flying and testing and compensation for losses arising from accidents.

THE TELEPHONE RANG. 'Hello, Sister speaking.' 'Path. lab. here. Will you take a report please, Sister?' 'Ready.' 'It's a report on a faeces received from little Michael Watson. We have isolated a moderate growth of Shigella sonnei.'

That telephone call sets the whole ward into action. A short time later Michael Watson is in isolation, his toys etc. being sterilized carefully. Specimens of faeces from the other patients are collected and sent to the path. lab.

There is general fear and trepidation. The dysentery may have spread to the rest of the ward or even to other wards. Reports from the laboratory are eagerly awaited. If there are no more 'positives' and it is not too inconvenient, young Michael is sent home. The nurses breathe a sigh of relief and once again get on with their normal work.

But what happens to our patient? Who is going to keep a check on him now that he has left hospital? Where did he get the germ from? Have any of his friends got it too? What about his parents?

These are all questions that have to be answered. And they are questions that the average nurse does not have time to think about. Her time is taken up so fully with her battle inside the four walls of the hospital that she tends to forget that there is an army of workers fighting just as grim a battle outside. These are the legions that go by the name of public health workers.

In the battle against disease, the public health laboratory is the operations room where plans of campaign are drawn up and put into action.

During training the nurse will have come into contact with this other world; this world which works on the theory that 'Prevention is better than cure.' But she probably saw only half of the picture. Her most vivid memories will tend to be of hordes of children waiting for inoculations or attending the school clinic, babies crying at the welfare clinic, pregnant mothers queueing at the antenatal clinic, and innumerable bottles of orange juice and cod liver oil for the young mothers. These are all very important parts of the service. But none of these helps our friend Michael Watson or answers any of our questions.

In the centre of this world of specialists, doctors, nurses, midwives, dispensers and many others is usually a small laboratory. This is the public health laboratory, the nucleus of the service and the centre of activity.

Upon this little laboratory the health of a whole town or a large district virtually depends.

The laboratory deals exclusively with bacteriology and its duties are threefold: routine public health bacteriology, the control of outbreaks, and research work.

Routine Public Health Bacteriology

The law sets a required standard of cleanliness for milk, water, and ice cream. Samples of these are collected and brought to the laboratory. Here they are put through various tests to see if they conform to the required standard. If they do not, further steps must be taken to track down the source of trouble. This means that more samples must be collected. In the case of water a full inspection is carried out to determine the source from which contamination may have occurred.

With milk and ice cream, if the further specimens remain below standard then it is necessary to go right back to the beginning. Samples are taken at various stages of production to discover at which point in the manufacture contamination occurs. Dirty churns, faulty equipment and bad storage are just a few of the causative agents.

The public health laboratory does a similar job to that of the path. lab. It helps the doctor to diagnose, to verify diagnoses, and to show that the patient is clear of infection. The specimens are received mainly from GPs and include sputum, urine, faeces, throat and nose swabs.

The port health authorities also work in conjunction with the public health laboratory in their campaign against disease. Water from on board the ships is tested, specimens from ill seamen are collected and even rats are sent to be examined for the plague.

One final job that may fall into the category of routine work is the assistance given to the VD clinics. Any swabs collected are immediately taken to the laboratory for culture.

Control of Outbreaks

Outbreaks generally speaking can be classified into two categories: those caused by food poisoning organisms and those caused by a dysenteric organism. The former is usually confined to a family or to a small group of people. The latter often runs riot among schoolchildren, covering a large area and affecting a large number of people.

When dealing with food poisoning outbreaks not only is it necessary to find the causative organism but also its source. Faecal specimens from all those who are affected and from those who, though not affected, ate the same meal, are collected and examined. Samples of food are also examined. The trouble may be traced to a particular batch of food which is immediately removed from circulation. If the food itself is clean then any person who handles it is checked. One of these may be a carrier and unintentionally infecting the food as it passes through his or her hands.

The second form of outbreak is usually on a larger scale. This time several children in a school will go down with diarrhoea and perhaps sickness and fever. Laboratory examination of the faeces from these children will show that this illness is caused by a dysenteric or a salmonella organism. The next step is to find out how many other children are carrying this particular organism. So specimens are collected from all those who have come into contact with the infected children. The numbers often run into hundreds and may well exceed the thousand mark.

Apart from the large amount of laboratory work this entails, a great deal of book work is also necessary. Every specimen must be recorded and tabulated in order to follow the progress of each individual person. All positive cases are isolated, and nobody is allowed to return to school or to work until he has had three consecutive negatives.

It is into this category that our patient Michael Watson falls. Once he is discharged from hospital he comes under the care of the public health inspectors. They keep an eye on him and collect specimens from him and his family. It rests with the public health laboratory to say when he is clear of infection and able to return to normal activities.

Research Work

The public health laboratory is answerable to the Medical Research Council and this body may designate work to be done. For example, between 1953 and 1958 all the public health laboratories around the coasts of England were examining samples of sea water for bacterial contamination. This was to find out just how dangerous it was to swim from our beaches.

The MRC states which type of materials are to be used. This is so that results obtained from all over the country can be compared. By standardizing everything they then know that no one laboratory is using better media than another. But the actual approach to the work and the method by which it is done is left to the individual laboratory. A great deal of thought and work goes into this. All the different ways of tackling the problem must be considered. Many new and varied techniques must be evolved. Finally, all these must be put into practice under all conditions.

The second field of research undertaken is particular to one laboratory and depends upon the director of that laboratory following a line of inquiry or an investigation that he considers worth while. These investigations range from the examination of artificial fertilizers for bacterial contamination, the porosity of toilet paper and control of Shigella sonnei in schools to a widespread study of infantile enteritis. These are all conscientiously done and carried out with meticulous care. Many have brought forth great results. Bacteria are never static and the openings for inquiry are almost infinite.

Conclusions

This work done by the public health laboratory is not more important than that done by the hospital. But at the same time the hospital should not be regarded as being of prime importance either. Both are cogwheels in the great machinery fighting disease. Each is important and dependent upon the other.

Vacuum Cleaners and Infection

FURTHER INVESTIGATIONS have now been carried out into whether vacuum cleaners in hospital wards constitute a cross-infection hazard. (See also Nursing Times, December 16, 1960, p. 1557.) Trials were carried out at the Princess Louise Kensington Hospital for Children, and reported in The Lancet of January 21. Suction floor-polishers were also tested, and the conclusion was reached that while, on the whole, the exhaust air from vacuum cleaners was unlikely to constitute a hazard, if the suction floor-polishers tested were to continue in hospital use, their filtering systems should be redesigned to emit air no less pure than that of the vacuum cleaners.

Room air is much disturbed by cleaners with open exhaust jets, and these should not be operated in wards without some device to diffuse the outgoing stream of air.

Dust should be collected into disposable bags, so that the emptying of cleaners does not contaminate the air and cleaning staff. It is suggested that central vacuum-cleaning systems should be incorporated as standard practice in the design and construction of ward blocks in new hospitals.

Letters to the Editor

BEDSIDE TEACHING

MADAM.—After reading Miss McLaren's interesting article 'The Clinical Instructor' (February 3) I would like to forward some conclusions arrived at after completing 15 months as clinical instructor at Guy's Hospital.

A clinical instructor can: (1) provide an opportunity for nurses to receive instruction without interruption. A ward sister's instruction to her student continues—as do the interruptions; (2) give the student nurse security and an opportunity to discuss her problems with someone outside the ward team and yet in daily contact. I think this to be important. I believe that many student nurses refrain from displaying their problems to their ward sister, however much they may like her, because they feel that to do so is in some way a reflection on themselves.

The main problems I have encountered are as follows. (1) At first I found it difficult to work in the wards without automatically reacting as a ward sister—having been one for six years. It is most important to instruct in the ward and yet remain detached from general ward activity. (2) Using the time in the ward to the advantage, from the direct instructional angle, of the student nurses—not just helping them to 'get on'. (3) Learning when to leave the student and allow her to work alone and learning when to leave the ward; all the ward sisters have been most helpful, co-operative and welcoming, but even so, there are times in each day when one should leave the ward. At these times one must have a base to go to; I am fortunate in having my base in the school of nursing.

I still believe that the ward sister is the ideal clinical instructor, but in these times of the 44-hour week and consequent added stress I feel that clinical instruction by another sister is needed to give the nurses necessary supervision and security.

By directly instructing and supporting the student nurse one is indirectly removing some stress from the ward sister.

I invited anonymous comments from nurses I have instructed. The response was excellent and in brief these are the overall conclusions. The student nurses find it a great help. They appreciate having someone to instruct them with time to spare and no interruptions. They appreciate the opportunity to learn, I quote, 'on actual patients instead of learning these procedures theoretically'. I support this view. To teach nursing in a classroom is too limiting and too full of pretence to be satisfactory.

I think the most important observation is the phrase 'with time to spare and no interruptions'. Never, I trust, will a clinical instructor believe herself to be the only teacher of nurses in the ward, nor lead others to believe this. She is just one more bedside teacher, who, in times of even greatest stress, will still have 'time to spare and no interruptions.'

MADAM.—The more I see of clinical instruction, the more I am firmly convinced of the essential part it plays in the training of a good nurse. There are, I know, very many ward sisters like myself, who, unfortunately, do not have the time they would like at their disposal to give the student nurses the tuition and guidance they require on the ward. Let's face it, clinical instruction is the answer to this problem, and with co-operation between the ward team and teaching department a higher standard of nursing will be achieved.

From my own point of view during the time I had a clinical instructor in the ward I noticed a marked improvement in the bedside nursing of the patient, and a better nurse-patient relationship was created. The nurses I had in the ward developed more confidence in their work, were more interested and asked more questions. I found a daily discussion with the clinical instructor of great value in which to plan each day's programme and to discuss the needs of each individual nurse. I must also add that the presence of a clinical instructor in the ward stimulated me to teach far more than I had done previously!

Many ward sisters like myself were very apprehensive of this new venture of clinical instruction, but the results have shown us the benefits to patient and nurse. As ward sisters we must be alive to the fact that so often the administration and supervision required in the running of a ward curtails our teaching of the nurses. Surely clinical instruction by an experienced ward sister trained to teach in this way is the answer.

WARD REPORTS

MADAM.—After reading Monica Frost's article 'Nothing to Report', I felt that the 'Report' was merely an impersonal record of rather dull, but necessary, happenings to a group of unfortunate people, the writer of the report showing little evidence of any interest in her patients, the nurses being told the bare essentials, and the patient treated as a case and not as a person.

A good report is of little use unless it is given to all the nursing staff—either in writing or verbally. Questions and discussions of the patient and his illness could be encouraged more, for any interest shown by the student nurse would soon dwindle if all were merely given the orders and never explanations.

Notes of nurses' abbreviations made in psychiatric nursing may be of value to the doctor, when the nurse takes an interest in a particular group of patients and records any mental and physical progress. Discussions with the medical staff would teach the nurse more about her patients, and, with the use of her own observations, an accurate report should be produced, and be of use to all.

MADAM.—I am interested to read 'Nothing to Report' by Monica Frost.

Nurses seem to have adopted a literary style which often makes rather dull reading, but they are reporting facts, and this makes repetition necessary. Every profession has its own particular language and if the matter is accurate I see no reason for altering the style—some style is bound to emerge.

I notice that Miss Frost says that when a nurse writes 'good day' it would be helpful to know why. Yet when she reports 'no change' she thinks that there is no reason to include the patient in the report. I should have thought the opposite. 'Good day' has an optimistic ring and cheers the atmosphere of the report, but 'no change' has an ominous note and needs a qualifying remark or instruction.

My experience as a ward sister is that repetition is necessary both verbally and in writing. The student nurses are a moving population and appreciate being told exactly what is expected of them. They are happier because they gain more confidence and will make better staff nurses and sisters.

Whatever system of reporting is agreed on it must leave room for details of nursing treatment if high standards are to be maintained.

SALARIES

MADAM.—The recent 5 per cent. salary increase is ridiculous.

Many other occupations, already better paid than nursing, are seeking, or have been granted a much greater rise in salary.

It is time that our representatives on the Staff Side of the Whitley Council showed a proper pride in our profession. There is nothing wrong in seeking a just reward for our work. If there are any senior nurses who feel it is not quite ladylike to press for higher salaries, they are living very much in the past, and are certainly doing present-day nursing no service.

One realizes it must be extremely difficult to persuade the Treasury to part with more money; other professions have found it so. With perseverance and determination, however, they have had some success.

The Royal College of Nursing is not the only voice on the Staff Side of the Whitley Council, but it should make a full statement of its policy in salary discussions, to its members. It is true that the College exists to serve the interests, not only of nurses, but of nursing. The greatest service it can do nursing is to ensure that adequate numbers of the right calibre of women enter the profession. Today, salaries and conditions which can compare favourably with other occupations are essential, if this is to be so. It is the duty of the College to do its utmost to secure them.

There was a time when many girls of limited means took up nursing, because training was free, and board and lodging provided. Now, grants are available for many trainings, and there are plenty of opportunities for women to serve the community, and receive a good salary and conditions of work. Nursing has much competition to face—do our leaders realize this fully?

It is difficult to improve conditions without more nurses, but higher salaries for trained nurses can and should be made possible—now.

What is the College doing about this?

THE STATE OF NURSING

MADAM.—As one of the 'might have been part-timers' I was very interested in Miss McMahon's letter (February 3).

As an ex-theatre sister with my children at school, I offered my services to a local hospital; during term time I was prepared to work a five-day week, 8.30 a.m. till 5 p.m. I was told that all part-time staff worked alternate weekends, and until 8.30 p.m. on one evening.

Our probation officers, welfare workers, etc., all tell us that it is psychologically bad for children to come home and find mother at work. There have been so many child murders in the 12-year-old group that I did not feel happy about my daughter coming home to a secluded empty house and be alone for an hour even on one day a week.

When my daughter was a baby I helped at the hospital every evening and I am sure Miss McMahon's incentives could help young mothers and part-timers without families to fill in the gaps left by those who CAN only work while their children are at school.

I wonder what others have done; for myself, I have obtained stimulating work far from the nursing profession.

A WILLING HELPER.

VOCATION OR PROFESSION

MADAM.—Replying to the letter from J. A. G. Lawrence (Nursing Times, January 20) may I suggest that anyone who has a vocation does take up nursing. The desire to nurse and help others begins in their early childhood and does not need someone to play on their adolescent emotions to bring them forward to train as a nurse. Surely this argument as to whether it is a vocation or profession has worn itself thin, and the proof has been shown over and over again by the shortage of nurses.

I think the answer is that once one is qualified then one should be made secure in the competitive material world, and being secure will willingly offer a vocational attitude to our work.

I am weary of Florence Nightingale—even though I admire her—being brought everlastingly forward in outmoded ideals. For Miss Nightingale had the right contacts and a private income to start her foundations—she had security.

It is about time we made our profession one in line with the doctors, teachers and police and not despised because we cannot take our place socially side by side with our equals because of inadequate salary, which of necessity gives us an inferiority complex, and does not help recruitment into our depleted files.

MADAM.—All mothers of daughters will thank Dr. Kidd for his efforts towards more kindness in maternity hospitals.

But what of those in authority who try and squash the young nurses' compassionate instincts, and tell them not to stay with patients?

How can we protect women in pain, and others, such as the elderly, or insane, from the deliberate bullying, threats and slapping? Couldn't this, if witnessed, be classed as 'infamous conduct' in doctor or nurse, and be punished by reprimand or dismissal? Surely it disgraces the profession far more than a genuine mistake, which most patients will forgive. Where are the sources of kindness? Heredity, environment, experience, or the grace of God (atheists can be so much nicer than many Christians). Can it be taught? Some mothers noted that the orderlies and cleaners gave them most help.

Likewise, from where come the cruel streaks? How lovely the spirit in the Dutch hospitals sounded, as described by Joan Weston (December 23). Is example, from the top downwards, part of the answer? I do get depressed on seeing so often that mere money will put everything right.

THE BOERHAAVE REVISITED

MADAM.—In the Nursing Times of January 6 I found 'The Boerhaave Revisited', by Miss J. A. Greene, which article is very nice, but I should like to correct one wrong item of information in it. The nurses of the Boerhaave don't work a 56-hour week, but a 48-hour week (long enough). As you yourself know all about the international action to shorten this 48-hour week, you will understand why I ask you to correct this mistake in your magazine, which is read by so many. I should be ashamed if my country should be considered so backward!

Although I did not intend to write to you about another (much too flattering) article about the Dutch hospitals, now I am on it I want to say that Miss Joan Weston, in 'Good Citizens' of December 23, gives an entirely wrong impression of these. The many complaints about them which reach me are at least as serious as those Dr. Hugh Gainsborough wrote of. Although we elderly nurses take all these things rather philosophically still there is no reason to believe the Dutch nurse on the whole to be a kind of angel, having 'about her a quiet air of serenity'.

Hoping you will be so kind to overlook my many mistakes in typing. With Collegial greetings.

PICTURE OF A MIDWIFE

MADAM.—In the Nursing Times of January 27, page 109, there is a picture of a midwife and newborn baby. The midwife wears a Red Cross armband, which gives an unfortunate amateur impression, even though many people know that plenty of Red Cross workers are State-certified midwives, many people do not know this.

This midwife is standing apparently on the 'wrong' side of the bed. She is above all, pulling most dreadfully on the baby's cord. Why no gown? Why no stockings on the mother? An unfortunate illustration for an article on nurse training.

[This is a visual age and we feel (and most readers seem to agree) that a picture tells a story. The photograph that illustrated our article on obstetrical training was one taken in Norway. Other countries have different customs and procedures from our own. Perhaps it is a relevant reminder that in 1957 the Norwegian infant mortality rate was 20.5 per 1,000 live births, while in England and Wales in 1960 it was 21.7 per 1,000.—EDITOR.]

EXTRAORDINARY MEETING, NCN

minster Hospital Nurses' League, supported this strongly.

Miss Hall said that there had been a failure of communication; we could have been conditioned to the increase if everyone had been made acutely aware of ICN activities—for instance, by the publication of a five-year programme. Miss Udell felt sure that the resolution would be lost at Melbourne. We would then be committed to paying the doubled dues. If the resolution were withdrawn we would be in a position to negotiate with the finance committee of the ICN on our present peculiar circumstances. In the unlikely event of it being carried, we would be depriving the ICN of increased dues from those countries which had indicated that they were able to pay.

It was agreed finally that the resolution should be withdrawn; that this country would abstain from voting on the Helsinki resolution, because it was possible that we would be unable to pay the full dues in 1962.

Speaking on the last of these resolutions—the proposal that dues should be paid only for those nurses who had had a generalized training in the care of children and adults, both well and sick, Miss M. Carpenter, RCN, said that this was a more important issue than any other. The resolution carried at Helsinki signified that the ICN was taking upon itself the power and duty to define the training of a nurse. This was quite contrary to our view of the function of the ICN. In this country we were endeavouring to achieve a comprehensive basic training, but this did not alter the principle: such a training might not be the best thing for another country. She suggested that this resolution should be resisted 'to the last ditch'.

Miss O. Griffith, Society of Mental Nurses, thought that the ICN would have to realize that this country would no longer be eligible for membership—no nurse here would qualify according to the definition given in this resolution.

Miss Udell said that if every delegate at Melbourne were completely honest and clear-thinking, then almost no nurse from any country would be eligible. She felt that we should lead others to the extent of saying that we should have to withdraw from membership if this resolution were passed.

Even if the wording of the resolution were clarified and UK general-trained nurses were eligible, it would still be unacceptable, said Miss Hall. A situation where those on the other parts of the register were excluded from membership would be totally unacceptable to our nurses.

At the end of the meeting Miss Lawson again emphasized the need for more, and wider, information. She felt that the five delegates would have to do their best by their wits. Owing to the difficulties and confusions they would be unable to be truly representative of all members of the NCN.

Miss Udell extended a heartfelt vote of thanks to Miss Lawson for the way in which she had conducted this meeting and for all her work for the council. Members owed her a great debt of gratitude. On their behalf, Miss Udell wished Miss Lawson good luck in her nomination for presidency of the ICN.

The Duties and Position of the Nurse

This is the joint document produced by the Royal College of Nursing and the British Medical Association and is the subject of this week's leading article.

1. The British Medical Association and the Royal College of Nursing have given consideration to the position which has arisen as a result of the additional duties allocated to nurses which appear to be outside the generally accepted scope of nursing practice. It would seem that in the main this position has resulted from the advances in medical science and the new and complex techniques to which this has given rise.

2. Concern is felt on two counts. Firstly, the performance by nurses of many new complex duties is making inroads into the time which should be more properly devoted to their true nursing function. Secondly, the carrying out of various of these new forms of treatment by the nurse has resulted in increasing responsibility devolving on her and there is need to ensure that the professional position of the nurse in these circumstances is safeguarded.

3. The British Medical Association and the Royal College of Nursing are agreed that certain duties are outside the province of the nurse and should only be undertaken in a grave emergency. Many other techniques fall outside the scope of routine nursing and should only be assigned to the nurse following agreement amongst those concerned and after full consideration of all relevant circumstances including the competence of the nurse concerned to undertake these duties.

4. In order to reach agreement on the procedures to be undertaken by the nursing staff in a particular hospital, or group of hospitals, joint committees of medical and nursing staff should be set up on a local basis. These committees should include inter alia the matron and a representative of the consultant staff.

5. Similar machinery should be set up by those engaged in the health services administered by local authorities. In this instance the committee should include inter alia the medical officer of health, representatives of general practitioners in the area and public health nurses. It is believed that this pattern might also usefully be followed in the occupational health field.

6. Although questions of the kind under consideration should be susceptible of resolution by nurses and doctors in the manner described, it is important to bear in mind the position of the employing authority. Accordingly, when agreement is reached which involves a nurse in any work outside her customary sphere of activity, this should be communicated to and approved by the employing authority.

7. In paragraph 6 of Memorandum RHB 49/128 of the Ministry of Health, it is made clear that hospital authorities are expected to undertake the defence of a nurse in any proceedings commenced against her. Cases where the nurse is considered to have acted outside the scope of her authority are to be referred to the Ministry for consideration. It is considered that whether a nurse be employed by a hospital or a local authority she should be equally covered by the employing authority in the event of any litigation in which she might become involved.

8. Within the hospital service the establishment of nursing advisory committees, consisting of nurses elected by their fellows, for the purpose of discussing matters arising from the pursuit of their profession (comparable with the medical advisory committee) would provide a valuable forum for deciding on those matters which should be put forward for discussion with medical colleagues through the machinery suggested in paragraph 4 above. Appointed members from the nursing advisory committee might then act as the representatives of the nursing staff on a medical-nursing liaison committee. Furthermore, such machinery, in addition to facilitating discussion and determination of the respective frontiers of professional responsibility, would promote inter-professional understanding, co-operation and co-ordinated action to the benefit of both professions.

9. It would appear that the problem of nurses being called upon to undertake duties outside their generally accepted sphere of activity cannot be dissociated from the question of adequate establishments for medical and technical staffs. Where these establishments are inadequate extraneous duties are more likely to be delegated to nurses, at the expense of their true nursing function. In these circumstances an adjustment to the establishment would prove a valuable first step towards alleviating a situation which is causing considerable concern to those whose responsibility it is to ensure that the highest standards of nursing care are made available to all patients.

IT HAS BEEN SAID . . .

'Viewed with a dispassionate eye, what a remarkable nation we are. We compel publicans to be open when they wish to be closed. We compel shopkeepers to be closed when they wish to be open. We willingly vote public money to buy paintings and last month the National Stud paid £25,000 for a horse. The Government's subsidy to the Royal Opera is half a million pounds a year, but for spastics and cancer research there has to be a constant appeal for private charity. And for children's feet there are "no Ministry funds available".'—From editorial article in 'The Chiropodist', January 1961.

HUMAN BEINGS are naturally lazy. Parents, having begotten and borne children, tend to care little further about them. They are dubious assets at best and they are not even regarded now as the meaning of marriage. Why then bother to exercise discipline and maintain standards? Yet the child so brought up is profoundly unhappy and at odds with a world that has, he feels, let him down. Hence juvenile delinquency. That is not the whole story, nor the explanation of every case, but we believe that it accounts for a good deal.—Leading article 'An Interpretation of Juvenile Delinquency' in The Medical Officer, Dec. 30, 1960.

Here and There

'Sufficient and suitable lighting' is required by the Offices 1960, which comes into force in January 1962. Here is example of bad office lighting, still to be found too ofte

HV Training Council

RCN representatives recently went to the Ministry of Health to discuss the proposals for a health visitors training council. They told officials of the Ministry that the College was willing to accept the principle of a training council for health visitors, separate from but associated with that for social workers, but they asked that certain points should be considered. Among these were a suggestion that the same person should not be chairman of both councils, that at least half the members should be health visitors, that a representative of the GNC and a general practitioner should be included. However, Sir John Wolfenden has now been appointed chairman of both councils.

First Aid in a Factory

Occupational health has always been a concern of Rubery Owen Ltd., of Darlaston, the largest engineering manufacturers in the British Isles, but on Sunday, February 5, they provided the equipment for another kind of nursing. In the works canteen St. John's Ambulance Brigade teams from many parts of Staffordshire competed in practical tests staged by Casualties Union in carefully realistic settings built by volunteers from the firm. A road accident, a gas explosion in the home, and a caretaker's fall in a deserted cellar were all promptly treated by officers and cadets of the ambulance and nursing divisions of several branches.

Mr. George Moseley, Brigade superintendent, said the demonstration was planned to show the need for care, especially on the road. 'I want to point out that crash helmets are essential for motor cyclists, and so is watching road signs. If the rider had seen the sign and halted the "accident" would never have occurred.'

Mental Health Exhibition, Birmingham

Many hundreds of people visited the exhibition held by All Saints' Hospital, Birmingham, from January 26 to February 4. The exhibition showed all aspects of treatment of mental patients and included tape recordings of patients' conversations before and after treatment. Visitors could, and did, ask questions of the medical and nursing staff, social workers and occupational therapists who manned the exhibits. Emphasis was placed on advances in care and treatment and on the importance of community care in the future.

the development of taste

A mother often wonders how soon her baby will enjoy the taste of his food, or make a face at something he doesn't like. A sense of flavour is essential in life, like seeing and hearing and feeling, but it is a sense which develops slowly and must be guided. That's where Twin-Pack comes in.

Scott's TWIN-PACK contains two separately packed cereals, two tempting flavours to teach a baby to recognise and enjoy variety. Two complementary cereals, oat and wheat, each providing body building protein in an easily digestible form. TWIN-PACK is more than just a Baby Food—it is a Baby Food which helps children develop that essential sense—taste.

Scott's Baby Cereal—OAT, consists of oat flour, malt extract, bone phosphate, calcium carbonate, dried yeast, salt, iron and ammonium citrate, manganese sulphate, copper sulphate and calciferol.

Scott's Baby Cereal—WHEAT, consists of wheat flour, malt extract, wheat germ, bone phosphate, calcium carbonate, dried yeast, salt, iron and ammonium citrate, manganese sulphate, copper sulphate and calciferol.

VITAVEL SYRUP and BEMAX are products of Vitamins Limited

Infective conditions in children

The febrile child suffers not only from the basic infection, but also from its toxic effects. For treatment of the debility and loss of appetite arising from the malaise, VITAVEL SYRUP is eminently suitable. It provides the vitamins which are not only needed in greater amounts but may well be lacking in the restricted diet of the febrile state.

One fluid ounce contains:—

VITAMIN A	20,000 i.u.
VITAMIN D_2 B.P.	3,000 i.u.
VITAMIN B_1 B.P.	4 m.g.
VITAMIN C B.P.	80 m.g.
PURIFIED GLUCOSE B.P. 25% W.V.

in an attractive orange juice base

BEMAX is especially suitable for children on the restricted diets taken during illness and convalescence, where its high protein and vitamin contents make a valuable contribution towards recovery.

In Parliament

Nurses Bill The Nurses (Amendment) Bill, which provides for the roll of assistant nurses maintained by the General Nursing Councils for England and Wales, and for Scotland, to be known as the Roll of Nurses and amends rules and certificates issued by the councils, passed its remaining stages in the House of Commons on February 10 and was given a third reading. On February 13 it was read for the first time in the House of Lords.

Midwives Sir Malcolm Stoddart-Scott (Ripon) asked the Minister of Health on February 6 if he was satisfied with the number of midwives now in the National Health Service and the number now being trained.

Miss Pitt, Parliamentary Secretary.—No, the number of midwives in the Service continues to increase, but there are shortages in some areas. The number in training would be adequate if wastage were reduced. I have recently sent another memorandum to hospital authorities suggesting measures to improve the position and calling for reports on action taken.

OBITUARY

Miss M. Burton

We regret to announce the death, after injuries sustained in a road accident, of Miss Margaret Burton, night sister at the Manchester Royal Eye Hospital. Miss Burton took her general training at Accrington Royal Infirmary and ophthalmic training at Moorfields Eye Hospital, London. Since 1953 she had served as sister at Bolton Royal Infirmary, Worcester Eye Hospital and at Moorfields Eye Hospital. She went to Manchester Royal Eye Hospital in 1959. Miss Burton was a member of the Royal College of Nursing.

Miss G. E. Gray

We regret to report the death, suddenly, in December last, of Miss Gladys Elizabeth Gray. Miss Gray took general and midwifery training at Crumpsall Hospital, Manchester, and fever training at Monsall Fever Hospital, Manchester. She did her health visitor training in Edinburgh, and later took the Royal Sanitary Institute Certificate in England. Miss Gray worked for the Lancashire County Council as health visitor/school nurse, from 1935 until the time of her death. A colleague writes: 'She worked devotedly among the handicapped and old people. As hon. secretary of the Public Health Section of the Wigan Branch of the College, she made tireless efforts in promoting the interests of the College, the profession and her colleagues; she was instrumental in forming the Wigan Branch. Her death is a great loss to all and is a personal grief to each of her colleagues.'

Miss E. B. Lawrence

We regret to announce the death, on January 28, after a short illness, of Miss Elizabeth B. Lawrence, administrative sister, Cumberland Infirmary, Carlisle.

Miss A. Urquhart

Miss Annie Urquhart, matron of the Ear, Nose and Throat Hospital, Glasgow, for 35 years, has died in a Glasgow nursing home. She retired in 1947, having held the post continuously since 1912.

MEMORIAL SERVICE

A memorial service for Miss Evelyn A. Rutter, formerly deputy matron of University College Hospital, and first assistant registrar to the General Nursing Council for England and Wales, will be held at St. Pancras Church, Euston Road, London, N.W.1, on Friday, February 24, at 12 noon.

Is hospital life really like this?

Announcing a New Mothercraft Film

"TAILORED FOR TIMOTHY"

THIS NEW 30-MINUTE TECHNICOLOR FILM has been specially made for showing to mothers and mothers-to-be at mothercraft classes, ante-natal clinics and other suitable occasions.

Filmed with the help and co-operation of the Royal College of Midwives and St. Thomas's Hospital, "Tailored for Timothy" tells a story of two baby boys. Both are first babies and both are the same age—but they start life with one basic difference, for Timothy's mother cannot feed him herself.

How the young mother's natural anxiety is allayed is told with warmth and understanding as, first at the Hospital and later at home, we follow Timothy's daily progress. The film shows the correct method of preparing artificial feeds and the need for scrupulous hygiene in the care of equipment. It also deals in a helpful manner with the infant's diet from birth and through the weaning stage to family meals. "Tailored for Timothy" is a 16 mm sound film, and it was produced by Eothen Films. If you would like to book the film—on free loan—please get in touch with Trufood Limited, 113 Newington Causeway, London, S.E.1.

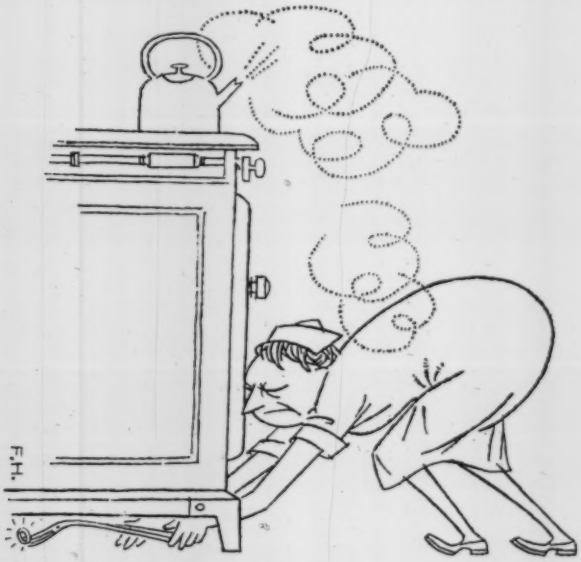
Epitaph for the Cheatles

PAT SUTTON

IT IS WITH DEEP REGRET that we view the gradual disappearance of the Cheatle forceps. American ideas, not content with invading the War Office, are now attacking the department of socialized medicine. Not only are we nationalized, we are also being centralized. The insidious advance of the central sterile supply departments into our hospitals is responsible for the decline of that old friend 'the Cheatle'.

No other forceps have given us such long and useful service. The powers that be inform us that we will no longer need Cheatles as we won't have a sterilizer anyway, but what will we use to unblock the sink? It is unbearable to think of this useful piece of equipment being sent into premature retirement. How will the senior nurse occupy her time in the morning if not in sprucing up the Cheatle forceps and the sterilizer? (We refrain from making the usual mistake of saying 'sterilizing the Cheatle forceps' because as everyone knows these forceps are always sterile by the mere fact of being Cheatles.)

Although the clinical room will be the most bereaved, we are sure the kitchen, sluice and bathroom will also miss this wonderful friend. The Cheatle forceps often visited them and helped out with the difficult jobs. There was that ring that rolled under the gas stove and that half-crown that slipped down the sluice. There is nothing to match their length and grasping ability. In fact the only things known to have been dropped from Cheatle forceps are stainless steel bowls and receivers.



Despite the ignominious assortment of containers to which they have been subjected the Cheatles have always held their heads high. Showing an unbelievable ignorance of their worth and dignity, people have actually used jam jars, urine glasses, flower vases and milk jugs—to mention only a few. This brings to mind another problem not wholly unconnected. How will the hospital kitchens now get rid of their empty jam jars?

The solutions used in these containers were so numerous that they defy description, not only in name, but also dilution, temperature and quantity. As the Cheatle forceps were a permanently sterile article there was no need for these solutions. In fact, not only were they sterile themselves, but they had the magic power of making everything they touched sterile.

Now they have been retired and in their place are rows of packs and paper bags. We feel the whole nursing world will want to join us in commemorating this truly great forceps, by saying (with apologies to that beloved statesman): 'Never has so much been done by so few to so many.'

By the way, would anyone like three empty jam jars, 7 lb. earthenware variety?

THEATRE SUPERINTENDENT

required at Farnborough Hospital, Kent, to take charge of modern Twin Theatre Suite opened in 1956.

The hospital contains 736 beds, of which the majority are acute, and there are modern compact surgical units in the departments of general surgery, gynaecology, E.N.T. and orthopaedics. The hospital is recognised as a general training school for nurses and also contains a midwifery training school. A great variety of operative work is undertaken and there is a post-graduate six-monthly theatre training course in operation.

The post carries the rank of Departmental Sister Category (B), and there is ample scope for a person with good organising ability. The post may be resident or non-resident; if resident, a flat is available.

The hospital is situated in attractive surroundings on the edge of the green belt, on bus and Green Line routes, within 1½ miles of Orpington, 3 miles of Bromley and 12 miles of London.

Candidates, who are invited to visit the hospital, should apply, with full particulars, to Matron by the 3rd March.

Help for nursing mothers

It frequently happens that the normal flow of breast milk fails to provide sufficient quantity or quality to ensure sound and healthy progress for new born babies. Lactagol Tablets provide a means of increasing the supply of breast milk so that normal breast feeding can be maintained or resumed with benefit to both mother and baby. Lactagol Tablets are obtainable from chemists and Welfare Centres. A professional supply will gladly be sent gratis on request to:
